

A red barn,
Across the road from the dinner,
One of the last vestiges of the past,
Holding out over these all years,
As the suburbs slowly subsume the surrounding land,
Where fields and forests once stood,
Now housing developments and concrete rule,
Could I only turn back the clocks,
And experience the world you were built in.